Center for Economic Inclusion names new chief operating officer

SAINT PAUL, Minn. – The Center for Economic Inclusion (the Center) is pleased to welcome Christopher Romano as its new chief operating officer responsible for overseeing internal operations and developing strong and efficient internal infrastructure and systems to equip the organization to perform at the highest possible levels.

Romano has had a diverse and exemplary career in leadership positions in both the nonprofit and private sectors, most recently as the Director of Strategic Operations for Thrivent Holdings, an entrepreneurial division of Thrivent Financial, where he built the strategic governance and operations model for eight entrepreneurial business lines.

“The COO role with the Center for Economic Inclusion embodies the alignment of my work experience, professional strengths and personal passions in a way that is extremely exciting to me,” Romano said. “I truly believe the Center is poised for great impact and success and I feel blessed to be part of developing and implementing its vision for a just and equitable environment for all.”

Throughout his career, Romano has led numerous organizations working to ensure communities of color and entrepreneurs have access to economic opportunity. Prior to his tenure at Thrivent, he served as Executive Director for the Riverview Economic Development Association, developing and implementing the District del Sol Commercial Corridor Revitalization Project, a catalyst for millions of dollars in real estate, commercial and public investment in Saint Paul’s culturally diverse West Side neighborhood. He also led youth programming at La Oportunidad (Minneapolis) and served with the Peace Corps in Nicaragua as a Small Business Development Consultant.

“Chris’ operations experience, authentic approach to leadership and experience advancing racial and economic equity will advance our work in myriad of ways as we accelerate the path toward an inclusive and equitable regional economy that works for everyone,” said Tawanna Black, founder and CEO of the Center for Economic Inclusion. “I am honored to welcome Chris to our team and look forward to working with him to develop a nimble and rigorous infrastructure to support our dynamic vision.”
